Currencies

The ZAR weakened against its major peers last week, after South Africa's ruling party, the African National Congress proposed to nationalise the South African Reserve Bank (SARB). Moreover, the central bank has stated that the SARB's shareholding has no bearing on its policy or regulatory role and that "any notion that a change in the shareholding of the SARB will amount to a higher degree of control over the central bank is incorrect". Meanwhile, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) has warned that the nation's economy is extremely vulnerable to external shocks and funding shortfalls, even as it maintained its 2017 growth forecast for the nation at 1%. Moreover, IMF added that there is a little room for fiscal and monetary policy instruments to boost the economy. In economic news, the nation's Barclays manufacturing PMI contracted in June. Additionally, Standard Bank PMI entered into contraction territory in June, reaching its weakest level since April 2016, amid a decline in employment, output and new orders. Whereas, SACCI business confidence index recorded a rise from a 7-month low in the same month. For the week, the USD strengthened 2.4% against the South African Rand to close at R13.3842. The EUR was 2.1% higher at R15.2572 and the GBP was 1.3% stronger at R17.2542 for the week.

The US Dollar strengthened against its key counterparts last week, after the US non-farm payrolls registered a stronger-than-expected rise in June. Further, ISM manufacturing PMI expanded to its strongest level since August 2014 in June. Moreover, ISM non-manufacturing PMI surprisingly advanced in the same month. Whereas, unemployment rate unexpectedly rose in June. Meanwhile, minutes of the FOMC's latest monetary policy meeting revealed that the Fed will start the process of reducing its $4.5 trillion balance sheet as early as September.

The EUR declined against the USD last week. The ECB's June meeting minutes revealed that policymakers discussed ending the central bank's extraordinarily stimulatory monetary policy, but decided against it out of fear of causing market turmoil, as economic recovery in the Eurozone had yet to result in higher inflation. On the data front, Eurozone's final Markit manufacturing PMI unexpectedly rose to its strongest level in 74 months in June.

The GBP weakened against the USD, after data indicated that UK's monthly manufacturing production painted a gloomy picture for May and monthly industrial production surprisingly declined in the same month. Further, Markit manufacturing and services PMI reached their lowest levels in 3 months and 4 months, respectively.

Commodities

Gold prices fell last week, as strength in the greenback after stronger than forecast US jobs data for June raised the chances of another interest rate hike by the US Federal Reserve (Fed), thereby denting demand for the safe haven asset. Going ahead this week, traders will keep a tab on the Fed Chair, Janet Yellen's speech along with the US consumer price inflation, Michigan preliminary consumer confidence index and retail sales for further cues.

Crude oil prices declined last week, after Russia ruled out any further reduction in crude oil supply other than ones already agreed. Further, oil prices dropped after OPEC's oil exports advanced by 450,000 barrels per day to 25.92 million barrels in June. Moreover, increased drilling activity in the US raised concerns of a supply glut, thereby weighing on the commodity. Meanwhile, the American Petroleum Institute (API) reported that crude oil inventories registered a more-than-expected decline of 5.8 million barrels for the week ended 30 June 2017. The US Energy Information Administration (EIA) reported that domestic crude supplies declined by 6.3 million barrels for the same week.

Copper prices traded in negative territory last week, after copper inventories in LME warehouses advanced 47% to 213,900 tonnes since 28 June 2017, after inflows into mostly Asian depots. Moreover, the biggest producer of copper, Chile's Antofagasta Minerals was facing potential strikes from workers at its Zaldívar mine and by supervisors at Centinela.
